'Swastha Se Shiksha Tak'

"My son Jeevan was diagnosed with Brain Cancer. It was the most devastating news for us as parents. We are grateful to Child Help Foundation who supported our baby's treatment by providing us with the money required for his chemotherapy sessions. The team helped us through every step and made sure that our child got the education he deserved. They helped us pay Jeevan's school fees. Today, our son is on the path to good health and goes to school every day. Thank you Child Help Foundation!" – Mrs. Sushma (the Mother of 5-year-old Cancer Survivor Jeevan Raja Shekhar)

Child Help Foundation helps children in need who suffer from terminal illnesses get emergency medical support by providing financial assistance. Under our initiative 'Swastha Se Shiksha Tak', Child Help Foundation provides educational support to children from financially underprivileged backgrounds. This program helps children who are terminally ill and have been provided assistance under the Child Help Foundation's flagship 'Emergency Medical Support' program, smoothly transition back into their education. The initiative is making education dreams come true for the children in need.

Education is one of the most important fundamental rights of a human being. Children's right to education should not be overlooked because of financial inabilities. Child Help Foundation helps such children in need by providing practical solutions to their dire problems.

We emphasize the importance of education and appeal to the generous and giving nature of the community. Donating and raising funds for the educational support for the children is investing in the country's better future by enhancing their lives.

Why Climate Change is Causing Floods In Assam?

Assam has been rightly called a miniature India because of its ethnic and linguistic diversity, natural resources, and the fact that it hosts various tribes residing in remote hills.

Even though historically the state of Assam has ranked among the most urbanized of India's states, it has been afflicted by various misfortunes recently. In addition, torrential rains and floods in the monsoon months destroy all the capital and development the state manages to produce all year.

The revered Brahmaputra has many meanings to the diverse communities of the state. But the river has also brought curses to the state. The river Brahmaputra divides Assam into two regions; North and South. This long and narrow river divides an entire state and is also very unstable. It changes its direction a lot.

Floods are not a new occurrence in Assam. Throughout history, the Brahmaputra has been prone to floods. There are several natural, hydrometeorological, and anthropogenic causes. Researchers have claimed that since the 1950s, a large earthquake caused much more instability in the Northeast. The state has become flood-prone because of the instability and newly arising man-made causes. Each year, flooding claims 100s of lives and affects millions. Assam has experienced 12 major floods since 1950, with the frequency being consistent in recent years, and the situation is showing no signs to improve anytime soon.

What adds to this misery? Climate Change.

For those living in Assam and the surrounding areas, the impacts of Climate Change are evident. The states in the North-East region are Assam, Mizoram, Meghalaya, Kerala, and parts of the U.P and Bihar. Whenever Assam is hit with floods, these neighbouring states suffer as well. These states have faced major sudden changes in their weather, especially these dry states like U.P and Bihar. The most radical change takes place in Kerala.

In the past, Kerala has experienced droughts, water shortages, and poor rainfalls.

However, Kerala's weather suddenly changes when Assam is hit by floods.

THE EMBANKMENTS

Embankments are the walls constructed on the banks of rivers to control the flow of the rivers by directing them in a particular way and to prevent flooding in the nearby regions. Historically, people have believed embankments to be the most efficient way to prevent floods. But the major flaw that remained unacknowledged by the officials is that when you try to restrict a river flow by narrowing it down and reducing its area, then the speed of the flow will increase along with an increase in the water level. Therefore, if these embankments are not maintained properly, then the levels will keep rising to a point when the river will start flowing above the embankments. Therefore, these embankments are reconstructed strongly before the monsoon season.
